Rayonier Expands Hunting & Recreation Program in Washington

POULSBO, Washington – Rayonier (NYSE: RYN) announced today it will be expanding its Hunting & Recreation program to approximately 120,000 acres of forestland in Washington, formerly owned by Pope Resources. Rayonier acquired Pope Resources in May of 2020, adding approximately 120,000 acres of high-quality forestland and real estate to Rayonier's 380,000 acres holdings in Washington and Oregon, and 2.3 million acres nationwide. In 2010, Rayonier implemented a Hunting & Recreation program in Washington, expanding it into Oregon a few years later.

Permits are expected to go on sale July 5, 2021. Rayonier will offer a combination of free access areas, Recreational License Units, General Access permits, and Enhanced permits in the lands formerly owned by Pope:

- Free Access Permit: walk-in only access will be offered free of charge over approximately 31,700 acres, however, a permit will still be required. 7,200 acres will be available year-round, while 24,500 acres will be available on a seasonal basis.
- Recreational License Units: exclusive access will be available in 30 units totaling 11,500 acres. Pricing will be set soon.
- Access Permits: covering approximately 62,500 acres.
 - General Access Permits: will be available offering walk-in only access at a cost of $100 per permit. Permits provide free companion access.
 - Enhanced Access Permits: will be available offering motorized access at a cost ranging from $100 to $400 per permit. Firewood cutting and companion access are included in the price.

Rayonier allows public access to several designated trails. Permits are not required while on the trail. However, anyone wishing to access Rayonier property, other than on a designated use trail, will need a valid permit.
